

Cancun – The “Camelot” of the Eastern Hemisphere

A typical November day in Cancun, Mexico will range from the low 70s at night to low to mid 80s during the day. Perfect vacation weather when the rest of the U.S. is growing steadily colder and with a hint of snow in the air, depending on where you live.

November in Cancun usually has only 5 days of rain, which normally starts around 6AM and is over by 9AM. And if there are thunderstorms, they usually occur around 9PM. Sounds a lot like the “rules” King Arthur made for Camelot.

Cancun is located on the Yucatan Peninsula in Mexico, just west of Cuba. The area developed a rich culture influenced by the Mayans and later the Spanish; it is a culture that is unique to Mexico. While the area embraces its strong heritage, it also has become very modern in conveniences and caters well to the expectations of today’s vacation traveler.

Rental cars and mopeds, or buses and “collectivos” all cover the area equally well; it just depends on where you want to go and what you want to see. Taxis, while available, are not the best choice for anxiety-prone travelers (multiply a dashing NY cab ride times 4). And don’t forget to take the inexpensive ferry ride to get a sense of the Gulf of Mexico.

Although full of luxurious accommodations the area is still steeped in history and makes for one of the most enjoyable vacations destinations that Rooms101.com provides. Since there is so much to do and see it is advisable to consult with your Rooms101.com agent to plan your trip. You don’t want to miss a single minute or opportunity in this unforgettable travel experience.

For more information about vacations to Cancun, Mexico, visit <http://rooms101.com/category/cancun-vacation-deals>